

Habitat win for Nemea

Business and information systems consultancy Nemea recently won the contract for the business process re-engineering phase of the end-to-end supply chain programme for Habitat, the home furnishing and accessories retailer.

This is the first phase in a major programme that, over the next four years, will incorporate systems, processes and organisational structure to deliver a complete new supply chain solution.

“Nemea demonstrated a good understanding of our requirements across the entire project,” said Clare Rayner, Business Information Services Manager for Supply Chain at Habitat. “Taken together with their experience of delivering similar business process re-engineering initiatives with other retailers, we are confident in Nemea’s ability to deliver. Also, the clear fit between both our companies makes for an ideal working relationship.”

“Habitat is a well-known, highly-respected retailer with a rich heritage of design and market innovation,” said Paul Sandford, Managing Director of Nemea. “We are proud to be associated with a company of this calibre.”

“As a retailer, a robust, reliable supply chain is vital to our success,” said Clare. “For Habitat, this project is important and will ultimately provide us with the best infrastructure to supply our stores and bring excellent service to all our customers”.
